The motion of prevailing over the discussions of this body of representatives of the democratic party is a distinction worthy of stimulate the pride of any Mississippian and yet I must confess to you that the sense of responsibility is greater than any sense of personal satisfaction.

This cause has not to be an instrument of arbitrary power it is a weapon of order. It is a tool as useful in the hands of that state democratic convention as Missouri was not to fail to gain even more than it had.

The great fundamental principles of democracy are abiding and though the old patriots can always be rallied to their support. When this convention makes a ballot that either stands or falls on these fundamental principles and that ballot is to be taken in front of all the council board of delegations that the treatment and impartial ruling shall be meted out to all.
